A Fierce Encounter between a Portion of the Frecession and the Police.

Shortly after the line of march had been taken up by the Societies forming the front of the procession, and while the Brooklyn Societies of Ancient Hibermans were awaiting in Grand street, near the corner of Pitt, preparatory to joining the main body, a serious rio occurred filtermans were awaiting in Grand street, near the corner of Pitt, preparatory to joining the main body, a serious rio occurred between the members of the above named organizations and the police. It appears that the primary cause of the disturbance was the obstruction of the thoroughfare by a trackman, the position of whose team interfered somewhat with the free movement of the procession. The driver was ordered by the police to move out of the way, but finding it impossible to do so readily, owing to the same which committeed the streets, attack was made upon him by, a number of men in the procession. Folice Officer Harseman, stationed in the vicinity, hearing the cutches of the excited crowd, hummediately hastened to the scene, and appropriately a trackman in the police to move out of the way, but finding it impossible to do so readily, owing to the shade was the obstruction of the way, but finding it impossible to do so readily, owing to the shade was the obstruction of the way that the primary cause of the disturbance was the obstruction of the bottle procession. sons. - The Board met gesterday afternoon. Supervisor Little, the President in the Chair. Mr. Scholes rose to a question of Chair. Mr. Scholes rose to a question of privilege, and showed by facts and figures, that the statement made in the Board of Liucation at the last meeting to the effect that sufficient money had not been appropriated for building school houses, was incorrect. Since 1855, they had received all the money required with the exception of about $5,000. The special committee in relation to the subject, reported in favor of laying a which sewer from the County buildings and Prospect park to the tidewater in Jamaica Bay. A resolution to confer with the Park Committee presented an act for presentation to the Legislature in favor of raising $75,000 for the enlargement of the Lanatic Asylum and Nursery. Accept

The Triumph of a Woman's Love.

Letty released his hands to throw her arms round his neck. "You will not bear me," she sobbed, "and there is nothing before us but sin and misery. God help me! God help us both! I could have borne poverty, sickness, anything but the loss of your honesty. Oh, Mark! my poor, poor mistaken husband."

And then, gliding on to her knees, with streaming eyes and folded paims, she prayed in broken but fervent words, scarcely spoken above her breath, that some good spirit would bend the stubborn will, and touch the closed heart which refused her entreaties.

mark, with the coveted money still in his possession, took one stride toward the window, then paused and looked back at his kneeling wife. He had never meant her te know this. Mrs. Henderson, misinformed by one of the servants, had assured him that the slumbers of the convalescent Squirt were no longer watched. And Letty had seen him: Henceforth he was abased in the eyes of the only creature by whom he cared to be honored. Could he complete the crimt while she knelt there invoking Heaven it his behalf! He came back to her side, bent over her till his lips touched her clammy forehead, then, dropping the bag of gold in her lap, he sprang through the casement and disappeared in the darkness.

But Letty did not rise. With feature that were stiffening with horror, she crouched lower and lower, staring wildly at the deor of the dreasing-room. For there, unnoticed by Mark or by herself until this moment, stood Squire Desborough, supporting himself against the door post, and holding in his right hand one of the loaded pistoh which always hung over the mantel-piece. Mark, with the coveted money still in his

Flying to intercept his progress, she piteously besought him not to fire. Mark was her husband, and he had already repeated his wicked intention. He had not taken anything; he had not, indeed! See! and quivering from head to foot she pointed to the money, and entreated for "mercy,
mercy!"

She could say no more; but her eyes, is which hope and despair alternated, still questioned the grave face of her master.
Leaning upon her shoulder for support,
the squire carefully secured the casement bade her restore the gold to the cabinet, put the key in his own pocket, and then with much difficulty retraced his stops to his casy
chair.
Not till he had somewhat recovered breath
was the ominous silence broken. Then, was the ominous silence broken. Then, signing to Letty to stand before him, he sternly bade her explain her connection with the intruder; adding a warning, that he would not endure with any attempts at concealment or deception.

he would not endure with any attempts at concealment or deception.

But the still trembling girl had no disposition to attempt either. Perfect frankness? was natural to Letty, who had cerrically become a state of the still trembling secrecy their marriage; and without an effective at reserve she told everything from belief first meeting with Mark Layton to the programment moment.

The Squire heard her tale with series of the suffer same than and many interruptions. We will also she began to speak of the suffer so t mind.

A new light was now thrown on Mrs. Henderson's strange hints and stranger speeches It was she who, possessing the failings without the virtues of her parents, had always fostered in her brother a disposition to avenge on the proud man who held the Desborough property, the misfortunes which they dated from his accession to it.

It was not until after the Squire's house-keeper had missed the important key, and on returning to the shop to institute a search for it, had admitted the value of the articlet contained in the cabinet, that Mrs. Hender son lighted on the missing article, lying between some of the goods her customer had disparagingly tossed over.

Loth to oblige by returning it, she was hesitating what course to pursue, when her brother unexpectedly came to visit her. The firm in which he held a junior clerk ship had failed, and that at a time of commercial panies, which rendered it very difficult to procure another situation.

Daily and nightly Mrs. Honderson and, his necessities tempted him, and that desire to avenge his father's wrongs, which he had been taught to regard as a duty, mada him lend an ear to such suggestions.

But when Letty—fair, pure and trusting—appeared before him, and his slater him ted that she might be unde an unconscious agent in their plans, he began to waver, flood and evil alternately held the mastery; and when, after a long and bitter struggle, his stealthy steps led him to the spot where for the first time he was about to degrade himself by a theft, his white lips breathed a vow that, once safely in another clime, with Letty beside him, he would lead a life that should never bring a blush to the check of the young wito for whose sake he strove to persuade himself this money must be obtained.

With her suspicions how the key came into Mark's possession, Letty's story ended, and she fearfully waited the Squire's com-

she answered:
"I'll never share in a crime, sir; but I'll be a true wife to Mark. And—and, I'll hope and pray. My prayers were heard to night, and maybe they will again." The Squire waved her from him.

"There, there—ring up my man and ge away; go to bed, and I'll talk with you to-morrow."
